Notes for JAMES MARION CHOATE:

Marvin Choate wrote the following Column for his father.

James Marion Choate was born in Dickson County, in the Mt. Lebanon Community, May 29, 1842. He was the son of Squire Jackson and Orleana Sanders Choate.

He was a direct descendant of Christopher Chotte (Choate) who came with Charles Calvert (Lord Baltimore), as a passenger to Ann Arudel County Maryland in 676, being the seventh generation in descent.

Mr. Choate enlisted in General Forrest's Cavalry, Along with Four of his mother's brothers in the Confederate Army.

In 1870 - December 18- he was married to Mary Duke, oldest daughter of Briton and Lovina Crews Duke. They were the parents of eight children- seven sons and one daughter all of whom are deceased except one son.

His father bought the farm which we now own, in 1856 from Samuel Sanders. From that time on he lived and maintained the farm until his death Sept. 5, 1910.

He was a farmer who procured by hard work and diligent care, a good living for the family.

While he lived we had a smoke hose, corncrib, vegetable garden, fruit orchards, chicken house and spring house.

He was also a veterinarian, and spent time answering the neighbor's calls for his services in that time. His dentist forceps are still here-many people coming here for him to extract teeth. (he did not like to that.) He was a good blacksmith who always kept his farm horses well shod.

He barbered (or cut hair) for the whole community for many years. And, too, he could do a fair job of caring for people who were sick.

With over a century of occupation by one family his home place hold many memories both by recollection and tradition. I have heard him say that in the 1860's he helped to cut the timber of the land where the streets of Dickson Town now are.

He and his wife became members of Mt. Lebanon Methodist Church I 1865. Many of their children and grandchildren followed them in membership there.

The writer of this ask any descendant of this worthy couple to keep this article to pas to future generations.

ROSS'S BRIGADE, C.S.A. Although known by the name of its most famous commander, Lawrence Sullivan Ross, the Texas Cavalry Brigade was under the authority of three other officers during the War between the States.

The first commander was Col. John W. Whitfield,qv who, on October 23, 1862, was given command of a newly formed brigade composed of four dismounted Texas cavalry regiments-the Third, Sixth, Ninth, and his own Twenty-seventh. (The Third, Sixth, and Ninth had previously been brigaded together under Gen. James McIntosh in Benjamin McCulloch'sqv Army of the West and had seen action at the battle of Pea Ridge or Elkhorn Tavern in March 1862.) These regiments, recruited mainly from twenty-three central, northeastern, and north central counties, were veterans of campaigns in Indian Territory, Arkansas, and Missouri as well as in the battles of Iuka and Corinth. As part of Gen. Earl Van Dorn'sqv cavalry division, the remounted Texas Brigade raided the federal supply base at Holly Springs, Mississippi, in December 1862, an action that halted Ulysses S. Grant's land advance to Vicksburg. On March 5, 1863, the brigade, operating in Tennessee, captured a large Union reconnaissance force at Thompson's Station. Later, it participated in the first battle of Franklin (April 10, 1863).

Whitfield was promoted to brigadier general in May 1863. The brigade returned to Mississippi and occupied a position generally on the periphery of action during the Vicksburg campaign. Whitfield's health deteriorated, and Sul Ross of the Sixth Texas was appointed brigade commander. Because Ross was at that time on detached service with his regiment, command of the Texas Brigade temporarily went, on October 29, 1863, to Col. Hinche P. Mabryqv of the Third Texas Cavalry.qv Ross took formal command in mid-December 1863 and was promoted to general a few days later. The Texans spent most of the next five months operating against Union troops in the Yazoo River valley before being ordered to Georgia.

During the ensuing Atlanta campaign, the Texans spent 112 days under fire and participated in eighty-six engagements. They began the general fighting (May 25-June 5) at New Hope Church near Dallas, Georgia, but attrition had so reduced their ranks that the Texas regiments were overrun by the superior forces of Edward M. McCook and Hugh Judson Kilpatrick later that summer. After the fall of Atlanta the Texans marched with John Bell Hood'sqv troops into Tennessee. Throughout the disastrous campaigns of November and December 1864, they served as vanguards and rear guards, raided Union supply trains, and battled federal cavalry. In the withdrawal from Nashville they were one of Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest's two brigades covering the Confederate retreat. By then dissension was rife in the brigade, and desertions occurred frequently. General Ross returned on leave to Texas on March 13, 1865, probably in an attempt to recruit replacements for the depleted ranks. Col. Dudley W. Jonesqv of the Ninth Texas was in command of the brigade at its surrender on May 4, 1865, at Jackson, Mississippi.

Ross's Brigade, one of the most famous Texas military units of the Civil War, was also one of the most active. It was not, however, distinguished for its discipline. Its members were described as "rollicking, rascally, [and] brave" and appreciated for their dependability. Gen. Stephen D. Lee called the Texans the "most reliable" troops under his command. In 1875 survivors of the unit organized the Ross Brigade Association.
