SCOPE AND CONTENT

The Douglass-Maney Family Papers, containing approximately 250 items, spans the period 1805-1939. The collection is composed of accounts, agreements, clippings, correspondence, estate papers, genealogical data, invitations, program, etc., military papers, two pamphlets, and a few photographs dealing with the related families of Maney, Murfree, and Douglass of Nashville, Franklin, and Gallatin, Tennessee.

There are about one hundred and fifty letters nearly all written by members of the three families and most of them addressed to Martha Ann Maney who married Dewitt Clinton Douglass of Gallatin, Sumner County, Tennessee. Martha Ann was one of thirteen children of William Maney and Martha Ann Long Coakley (Murfree) Maney who lived in Franklin, Tennessee. Raised as a sister with these children was their first cousin, Elizabeth Maney Murfree (Betty), whose parents, William Hardy Murfree and Elizabeth Meredith (Maney) Murfree, died when she was an infant. Most of her letters to Martha Ann are signed “your loving sister” and she refers to her aunt and uncle as “Ma” and “Pa”. She married Henry Shelby Frazer of Lebanon, Tennessee. These letters between the sisters and the first cousin, Betty, are all well written and give a good picture of life at that time in a well-to-do family. When writing from distant places, such as Mr. Maney’s plantation in Mississippi, one sees their affection for the servants. They never forgot to send their love to “all, black and white” – “to all the servants”, etc.

The item of earliest date in the papers is the letter of Benjamin Coakley in 1805, addressed to Colonel Hardy Murfree in regard to the loss of his ship and cargo in a severe storm en route to the West Indies.

Of interest is the letter written by Susan (Maney) Boddie, March 2, 1851, in which she tells of the victims of cholera and adds that Dodge, the artist, “was very much alarmed” and went to Nashville the first day it broke out in Franklin and died that night. In an undated letter she writes about the Union forces that are camped in their grove at “Jessamine Hill” (today called “Myles Manor”), and describes the treatment received from the Union officers. She writes that General Granger (Gordon Granger, 1822-1876) asked her mother how many sons she had in the army. She told him and also mentioned other kin she had and he replied that he knew George Maney in Mexico and had traveled in Europe with James Maney. Then he looked at her and said, “Madam, I hate you”.

Two letters, 1844, of David W. Dickinson (1808-1845), representative to the United States Congress from Tennessee, give news from Washington and directions for laying out and planting a garden. His wife’s letter, 1844, also sends news from the nation’s capital.

Letters, 1848, of John Bell (ca. 1826-ca. 1890), husband of Fanny Dickinson Maney (1828-), have interesting descriptions of Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, commenting on the large number of free Negroes in the former and the black pall of smoke over everything in the latter.
Two letters from the mistress of “Rattle and Snap” give a small glimpse of life at that handsome home near Columbia, Tennessee. Sally Leah (Hilliard) Polk (Mrs. George Washington Polk) is the author of these letters written in 1845 and 1846, to her Maney cousins in Franklin, Tennessee.

James R. Bright’s letter from Fayetteville, Lincoln County, Tennessee, November 20, 1865, conveys the news that “everything is high and no prospect of cheapening”, but on the other hand he writes that the cotton business “looks much livelier than it did before the war” and “nearly every business house in the Town is occupied with either Dry Goods, Drugs or Groceries”. He also writes that the practice of law is very good and that they have a very good school. He names the teachers.

The earliest account in the papers is that of 1821, showing the charges for coopering, pickling, salting, freighting, and sale of shad for the account of William Hardy Murfree. Included are a few miscellaneous school and merchandise accounts (clothes, furniture, farm implements, etc.).

Clippings include a long account of the unfortunate episode which led to the homicide of Richard (Frank) Maney in New Orleans about the year 1865; an encomium on John C. Calhoun by Dr. Alexander H. Stevens of the New York Historical Society at its meeting April 1, 1850; muster roll of Company K, CSA, Second Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers; and an account of the Fayetteville (Tennessee) Observer, newspaper established in 1850.

Included with a few estate papers is the inventory of the personal property of William Maney (1799-1862) and a notice in the Probate Court of Madison County, Mississippi, January Term, 1867, in regard to the sale of the lands of William Maney for the payment of debts and for division.

Invitations include one to the wedding of Jennie B. McEwen and Newton Cannon, February 27, 1873.

With the military papers in the collection is the authorization, dated May 15, 1862, at Richmond, Virginia, for Major Dewitt Clinton Douglass “to raise a battalion of Partizan Rangers to consist of five companies for the War. Until the battalion is enabled to furnish its own horses it will serve on foot.…”

A copy of Confederate War Journal, Volume One, Number One, contains Confederate poems which evoke both pathos and patriotism including “Lorena” which was the great sentimental song of the war period. Included is a pamphlet concerning the restoration of the birthplace of Robert E. Lee, “Stratford” on the Potomac River, Westmoreland County, Virginia.

There are photographs of the Murfree home in Murfreesboro, North Carolina; the William Law Murfree home in Nashville, built in 1854 and only recently razed; the Maney home Franklin, Tennessee, called “Jessamine Hill”; the gravestone marking Colonel Hardy Murfree’s grave in Williamson County, Tennessee; and R. H. Walker in Masonic regalia. Included is a drawing of “Crag-wylde”, summer home of the Murfree family near Beersheba Springs, Tennessee.
