INTRODUCTION

The Estill-Ray Papers are primarily composed of correspondence and orders which pertain to the duties of G.M. Ray, an agent of the Commissary Department, Confederate States of America. There is also some correspondence from Nathaniel Green Estill which was written while he was serving in the Confederate Army. The donor of this collection is Mrs. Walter Davis, Whitewell, Tennessee.

The materials in this finding aid measure .01 linear feet. There are no restrictions on the materials. Single photocopies of unpublished writings in the Estill-Ray Papers may be made for purposes of scholarly research.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

This collection consists of twenty-seven items, the bulk of which is correspondence generated between 1861-1864.

The first folder contains orders and correspondence of G.M. Ray, an agent of the Commissary Department, Confederate States of America. These papers show conclusively that the Confederacy had a great deal of difficulty in obtaining foodstuffs and other provisions for the army. One discovers that commission agents were authorized to impress supplies from unwilling farmers and property holders. They could also call upon Confederate troops to back their requests.

Folder four contains two letters written by Nathaniel Green Estill to his mother and sister in Winchester, Franklin County, Tennessee. The first, written in December 1861, describes his preparations for a winter in camp, his newly acquired culinary skills and, of course, homesickness. In the second, written in Georgia in 1863, Estill expresses his belief that Bragg’s army would soon move north on Middle Tennessee and recapture the territory. He never saw further action, however, because he died of wounds which he had received in an earlier engagement.

Following these two letters is a page from the Winchester Bulletin of November 1864. An article reports the death of Felix Grundy Estill, a younger brother. He was killed during the fighting around Petersburg, Virginia.

The sixth folder holds a letter from Sam Willis Jones which was written in 1862 in a Federal prison camp. He tells his mother that he is healthy and well treated. Some of the activities in the camp are also described.

Finally, there are two typewritten accounts of family history from Jennie Lois Davis who donated the collection. In one, she elaborates on the adventures of other brothers in the Estill Family. The second is a delightful story of how mother and daughter, Nancy and Jennie Estill, made a rag wool carpet from discarded Union uniforms.
